Riel Remanded Verdict Delayed

by Joan Bradshaw

The trial of Louis Riel, leader of the Metis rebellion, was postponed at the Debating Union's mock trial in Redpath Hall last night. No unanimous decision was reached by the house, and the prisoner was remanded until the next session of the court.

John Long, Q.C., a lawyer, acted as judge for the event. He remarked that the trial would follow the law, but certain elasticity would be allowed in order to enable everyone to go home by midnight.

The Crown prosecutor was Chris Dobson, aided by Henri Lafleur, and Lionel Segal. All three are law students. 'Appearing as counsel for the defence was Pierre Lamontagne, assisted by Joseph Nuss and Colin Irving.

ACTUAL CASE

Riel led the Metis rebellion in 1884 against Her Majesty's Government. His venture was abruptly ended at the Battle of Batouche where his army clashed with the redcoats and was badly defeated. Last night's trial was based on the actual case, and although no one appeared as the leader of the ill-fated action, all participants represented actual people who tried Louis Riel after his revolt failed.

Dr. John Wolby, who knew Riel in actual life was portrayed by Roy Heenan. Norbert Walsh, a Batouche farmer was played by Michael McMaster. Other students appeared as actual witnesses of the real trial.

NOT GUILTY

The defence pleaded not guilty to the eight charges of treason laid by the Crown. The prosecution rested its case on trying to establish that Riel was furthering his own cause, rather than the interest of his people.

The defence maintained that Riel was not mentally capable to raise and maintain an army and stir up his people.

Therefore it would be impossible to try him for treason.

The defence emphasized that treason was not conclusively proven from the evidence presented, and the prisoner should be freed.

U. Of Toronto Supports

La Rotonde

(Special to the Daily)

TORONTO, Oct. 29 — The Students' Administrative Council of the University of Toronto tonight pledged their support to the three student editors recently fired by University of Ottawa authorities.

The editors of La Rotonde, Louis Cliche, Pierre Trudel, and Roger Roy, were removed "to ensure the maintenance of good relations between the student body and the university" last Tuesday.

After more than an hour of stormy debate the Toronto resolution was passed unanimously. Certain factions at first argued that it would be more in order to send a "letter of sympathy", but they were finally persuaded to support the stronger course of action.

The resolution condemned what the Toronto students' Council considered to be "thwarting of academic freedom and freedom of the press". Copies of the resolution will be distributed to university newspaper editors and student society presidents in Quebec and Ontario.

Five Year Council Doze Ends Tonight

The Presidents' council has been summoned by Roy Heenan, Students' Society president, to meet tomorrow night. It will be the first meeting of this committee in five years.

The main reason for the proposed meeting was given to be the lack of communications between the SEC and the divers clubs and organizations on the campus. One example of misunderstanding coming from the lack of unification was last year's conflict with medical students who were under the impression that they were not getting sufficient value for their fees to Students' Society.

In general, other topics of the meeting will be: the problem of students' fees, enrolment, the purpose of the Presidents' Council at McGill, and the provincial government's policy towards the University.

The Council includes the presidents of all McGill undergraduate societies.

Heenan said he anticipates full attendance at the meeting which will take place in the Club Room of the Students' Union tomorrow night at 7 pm.

Record Blood Drive Day, Brings Birks Nearer

These concerned looking gentlemen above represent a faction of the students lining up to donate their blood on the second floor of the Union. Many students are still procrastinating. But will fear prevent the Red and White from gathering the fruits of victory in this bloody, inter-collegiate battle? The operation involves little pain and event this is compensated for by free doughnuts and coffee given to donors after their ordeal... give now.

Engineers Blasted For Unfair Listing

by Fred Gricman

An emergency meeting of the Blood Donor Committee of McGill passed a resolution last night, criticizing the "coercive methods" used by the Engineering Undergraduate Society Executive in getting engineers to donate blood to the current drive at McGill.

The decision was taken, after the committee learned that the Engineering Society Executive has posted a list of 1400 engineering students on the bulletin board in the Engineering building — and then stuck a Red Cross pin beside the names of those students who donated blood.

"No one should be coerced to give blood" stated Edward Scott, Publicity Chairman of the Blood Donor Committee. "We are definitely against the methods used by the engineers".

DENIES COERCION

George Desjardins, the Engineering Undergraduate Executive's Chairman denied in an interview with the McGill Daily, that coercion was being used.

"We feel that the list will bring more spirit and underline the importance of the occasion" he said. "In my opinion, the opinion of those who accuse us of coercion, is an opinion of the few."

Some engineering students expressed dissatisfaction with the idea of a donors list.

INDIVIDUAL'S RIGHTS

Tom O'Shea, Civil Engineering IV, felt that many students were giving blood because "social coercion" was being used. "If I want to give blood, I will give it because of my own volition, and not because I am being black-listed to do so", said O'Shea.

cide must of course be respected, even on an issue of a worthwhile cause".

485 Pints Collected by Red Cross

McGill's blood flowed freely yesterday, and it is hoped it will continue to pour today.

A record number of 485 pints were contributed yesterday, at the five day blood donor campaign which is being held in the McGill Union.

Yesterday's contributions coupled with Tuesday's 415, and Monday's 422 gives McGill a total of 1322 pints. This number includes the 309 pints contributed last week by Macdonald College students.

BLOODY MARY

McGill's objective is 2,700 pints, and today's total figure represents 63 percent of the objective, which the students must meet if McGill is to wrest the coveted Birks Trophy from the University of Montreal. The U. of M. won it for the past three years.

The fate of "Bloody Mary" still remains undecided today. The Commerce faculty is leading with 47 percent, and is followed closely by Arts and Science-45.7 percent; Engineering 45 percent.

"Big Boris" seems to be a favourite of the Graduate Nurses School, with the pretty nurses going all out to gain the trophy awarded to the graduate faculty that has given the most blood. They have 78 percent, while the Divinity men trail with 48 percent.

LARGE BANNER

Yesterday's campaigning for more of McGill's blood featured a parade of 15 beautiful co-eds, wearing Red Cross bands, and singing lustily the "Bloody Mary" refrain.

The Union building itself is properly decorated for the occasion of the blood donor clinic. A large banner hangs over the entrance proclaiming "We Need Your Blood".

This Morning's Headlines News of National and World Significance

SPRINGHILL, Oct. 30 — After hearing cries for help last night, tired rescue workers broke through a wall of fallen rubble early this morning to free 12 men trapped by last Thursday's mine disaster. It was announced that there are possibilities that other miners are still alive in colliery number 2.

VATICAN CITY, Oct. 29 — Pope John XXIII today designated next Tuesday as his coronation day and called upon the world's leaders to channel man's genius into paths of peace.

QUEBEC, Oct. 29 — Health Minister Albiny Paquette and John P. Rowat, chairman of the Protestant School Board of Greater Montreal, have been appointed to the Legislative Council — 24 seat Upper House of the provincial legislature.

Indoctrination At McGill

In Yugoslavia, as in other Communist countries, students receive special attention. They all live together in huge dormitories, all eat together in an enormous dining hall, and all listen to the same Public Address system blaring at them for approximately sixteen hours each day. No student may have his own radio in his room (no one could afford it) and for the "common benefit" of all there are a number of loudspeakers scattered throughout the dormitory area constantly broadcasting news, music and political speeches from six in the morning to ten at night.

The students are thus subjected to a constant noise which they can in no way regulate. This system of public radio is regarded in the West as a prime example of totalitarian government, thought control (some use the terms 'poisoned minds'), and generally an infringement of the basic rights and freedom of man. We are always boasting of our liberty, our freedom to choose our own entertainment, our own favorite programs. We can turn on the radio or turn it off, as we choose. We are free (the free world); they are oppressed.

The leaders of these Communist dominated countries realize full well the pros and cons of their system of mass indoctrination. They know that university students do not appreciate the thought of awakening to the roar of Tito exhorting them to "collectivise, industrialise and electrify" or some newscaster describing the stupidity of the United States with regard to Formosa. These government officials feel, however, that the ends justify the means and that if the PA system gets the students up early and teaches them their responsibilities to "society", it is worth the grumbling and the complaints of the few dissatisfied enough to say so.

This week we are being subjected to this system of mass indoctrination right here at McGill. We refer, of course, to the sound truck which, every hour on the hour, cruises around the campus reminding us of our responsibilities to "society" and telling us that all McGill students should give blood because the man behind the powerful microphones says so. No explanation, just get to the Union and give blood.

The Blood Drive committee certainly must realize that sound trucks are basically incompatible with universities. But, to justify their actions, they insist that as long as the noise encourages people to give their blood to the Red Cross it really does not matter whether the truck itself is a good or bad thing. The ends justify the means, they say, if the end is giving blood.

We rather question their basic assumptions and hence their obvious conclusion. We agree that giving blood to save lives is a good thing and that students sometimes need to be encouraged to do good things. But on the other hand, sound trucks are not good things, in fact they threaten the very concept of university — the gathering of free minds seeking the truth. Wherein lies the difference between a sound truck haranguing us to give blood and one exhorting us to "industrialise, collectivise, and electrify" in order to build up a stronger and better Canada? We suggest that there is no difference and that we should consider our position before we allow ourselves to be the victims of any mass suggestion or indoctrination at university. We are supposed to think for ourselves — if not now, when?

Letters To The Daily

Dr. Wright Retorts

To the Editor:

I hate to keep at this but the problem is so important some further comment seems desirable.

(1) Mr. Fleischman seems to have missed the most important part of Darlington's analysis — Darlington's account of how grants must be processed by specialists in the fields: "This is the man whose reputation will suffer most" if the new idea is really important. Also Darlington's examples are many of them taken from after 1900, many from World War II.

I am afraid that Mr. Fleischman is due to experience great disillusionment if he thinks pedantry died in the Nineteenth Century — nor does "pedantry" quite cover the sort of intellectual preoccupation that I am concerned about.

Still more should Mr. Fleischman be disillusioned in mentioning Russian education, if he considers what Krushchev has just announced what he intends to do to it. Russia indeed is a good case in point. The State is finding that free discussion gets too free. So Krushchev wants to break up the educational centers and send the boys back to the farm! This was reported at length in The Star.

Mr. Robinson's points are rather different. I would say good education requires (1) lots of money, (2) lots of money, (3) lots of money. I certainly do not maintain that the "fewer the students the better". What I am maintaining is that there must be a reasonable relationship between the resources of an institution and its enrollment — in economic terms, the capital - out put ratio.

I think the remainder of Mr. Robinson's letter confuses the problems of McGill with the problems of Quebec. I am afraid I must plead guilty to thinking McGill best serves Quebec by remaining good, and if possible becoming better, rather than being dragged down to mediocrity through unjustified expansion. The dilemma of the poor boy must be met by scholarships from the Province and from the princely generosity of people like Mr. McConnell.

David McCord Wright,
William Dow Professor of Economics & Political Science

Social Register

To The Editor:

It was indeed strange to note the words "narrow-minded" and

Faculty Blasted For Unfair Listing

"The system of blacklisting in this case, was too extreme", he added.

Nick Asimakopulos, President of the Students' Union agreed with Heenan. "The Engineering Undergraduate Executive by using coercion forces the individual student to conformity".

Miss Margot Rivard, head nurse at the Blood Donor Clinic declined to comment on the issue, but said "McGillians, any faculty, any year, we need your precious blood".

"conformist", suggested by Mr. A. Fleetwood-Wilson, in connection with the comments in the Daily regarding the "social" register.

Surely an artificial publication of this kind does not enhance Canadian tradition etc. It merely underlines the backwardness prevailing in our social attitudes and values.

Furthermore, does Mr. Fleetwood-Wilson, honestly feel that a person who is "unselfish" and "has integrity and a true sense of values" would destine his efforts to be flaunted in the face of the Canadian public. On the contrary, I would think any such person would be revolted by it.

I commend the author of the Daily editorial in dealing with

Thief Flees From Biology Building

A sneak thief escaped with $25 yesterday, after emptying the purse of a McGill University Placement Bureau employee.

The theft occurred at the McGill Graduates' Society office, at 3574 University Street.

The thief was noticed running out of the building by a number of McGill staffers, and attracted the attention of a Graduates' Society official who chased after him down University street.

Upon reaching Milton, the thief sprinted across the street, and ducked into the Biology building, next door to the Arts and Science building.

Dr. Stanley, head of the Biology Department, gave immediate orders to seal all possible escape routes, by closing all the doors in the building. A call went out to police headquarters, and two squad cars with policemen and detectives arrived shortly at the scene.

The policemen carefully searched every room, but failed to find the thief. The victim of the robbery refused to make a complaint, and the squad cars departed without making a report.

Undergraduate Faculty Presidents' Letters

Dear Commencemen,

Once again the time has come for us to prove our supremacy. What better chance than during the blood drive? Bloody Mary has for two years found a resting place which overlooks the plebian element of McGill. Is Purvis Hall to be denied the presence of Bloody Mary this year? Will she sink to the depths of the Arts Building Common Room, or be stored away in an Engineers locker?

To ensure her restoration to her rightful place requires only ten minutes of your time, during which you will painlessly part with a pint of blood.

Bloody Mary's faith in commecemen is such that she has directed the Commerce Undergraduates Society to openly challenge any other faculty to remove her from her lofty position.

We do not intend to disappoint her.

Donate now, men of Commerce, so that Bloody Mary may point with pride at the bloodiest faculty ever to grace the McGill campus.

David Gowing, President
Commerce Undergraduate Society.

Dear Artsmen: and sciencemen:

We've done it before, we can do it again. Let's all be bloody.

We've done it before, we'll go out and beat the plumbers and commecemen. We give blood because it is the right and moral thing to do, not because our leaders tell us to. Our Arts and Science background teaches us to do what is right. The blood is needed and we therefore rush in to give it.

The plumbers and commecemen, of course, aren't intelligent enough to reason in this sophisticated manner. We must lead them in the proper paths and the only way in which this can be done is to bleed more and more often, than they do. Our destiny as the leaders of the world can best be realized by having Bloody Mary rest as the symbol of Arts and Science superiority in our halls.

Phil Belitsky, President
Arts and Science

Fellow Engineers!

We feel that we are the most spirited faculty at McGill and this week is an ideal opportunity to prove it. I don't think it is possible that Commerce or Arts and Science could give more blood on a percentage basis than us. However, we have to prove this by getting out and winning Bloody Mary who was captured by those Commerce students last year.

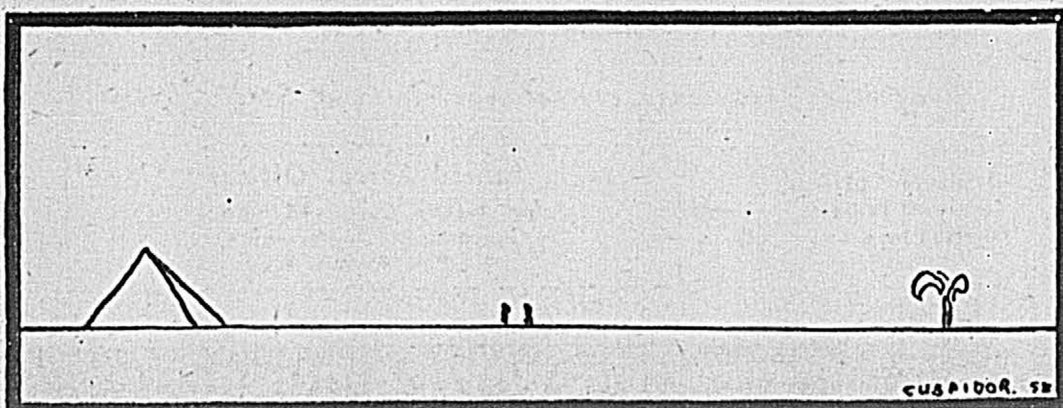

In everyday life, Engineers play the most important part, so that when it comes to giving blood, the worthiest citizens should give to the worthiest cause in the McGill year. Let's all get down to the Union to support the Red Cross and our Faculty.

Personally, there is nothing I would like better than to have the ASUS and CUS washing the steps of the Engineering Building on Friday afternoon. When this happens I hope you will be down there to catch me being able to say, "I helped make this possible".

About Our Team

Many students feel that support for our football team is extremely apathetic. As a matter of fact we were inclined to agree — until Monday morning that is. That morning a highly insulting headline topped the story of McGill Redmen's defeat by the University of Western Ontario Mustangs.

That day, and every day since then, the Daily office has been flooded with indignant Redmen supporters yelling that we were unfair to the team and that under the circumstances, they did a very creditable job. We heartily agree. The Redmen did do well in London, and the head was in extremely poor taste.

What impressed us most is the furor that this bit of cynicism caused on the campus. It restored our confidence somewhat to realize that there is a core of enthusiastic loyal fans in McGill who are ready to support the Redmen right down to the wire. What further impressed us is the fact that they are extremely proud of the team.

Although this group of students become dwarfed in the 26,000 seat Molson Stadium, it is nonetheless gratifying to know that they do exist.

For an indiscretion we apologize to the McGill Redmen, and more important to their supporters.

Meanwhile Back At The Pool

The McGill Water Polo squad were defeated 9-4 by a more experienced Davis YMHA squad last night at the Sir Arthur Currie Memorial Pool last night. The 'Y' showed why they are considered the finest team in Montreal. Led by such oldtimers as Syd Kastner and Norman Goldberg, and George Sevcsik, a former member of the Hungarian Water Polo squad (which was the best team in the world not too long ago), the 'Y' opened up an early lead, and never looked back.

Despite the score, the Redmen gave a creditable account of themselves. Considering that Leon Jacobovits is the only returnee from last year's squad, and this is their second game of the season, the Redmen indicated that they will be a force to be reckoned with in the future. Pentti Lomdo was the most effective forward for the McGill team. He scored two goals and was a standout at forward all evening. Cameron Grout, of swimming fame, scored a goal and showed considerable speed.

'Topper' Toporowski, who starred for McGill water polo teams for many years, is now playing for Central YMCA. Last night he scored several goals and played well in general, as the Central 'Y' toyed with the Snowdon YMHA, and easily beat them by over ten goals.

The Davis 'Y' played a very rough and aggressive game, which is nothing unusual. Syd Kastner was constantly called for holding, and at one point almost came to blows with a McGill player. Quick intervention prevented a serious incident from occurring.
